Exit - The Trial of the Conn O'Neill and the Gaelic Lords of Ulster before the Court of History

Written by
Anthony Russell

Presented by
Newpoint Players

Directed by

In Anthony Russell's latest political and historical fantasy Conn O'Neill (Abt. 1574 – 1619), the last Gaelic Lord of east Belfast, is called from the grave to answer the charge that he and his fellow chiefs, including Hugh O'Neill and Rory O'Donnell, betrayed Ulster and her people. Conn O'Neill who rebelled in 1601 is remembered in the names of the Connswater River, bridge and shopping centre.

The prosecutor is Thomas D'Arcy McGee (1825-1868), failed Irish rebel, British loyalist and founding father of Canada. The defence lawyer is John Mitchel (1815 – 1875), an unrepentant physical force, Irish republican. Sir Arthur Chichester (1563-1625) Lord Deputy of Ireland and Ellis O'Neill, Con O'Neill's feisty wife, are called as witnesses.

All are aware of what has happened in Ireland, including Brexit, since they died and comment accordingly. The judge Dionysus Cronos was present at the Trial of Socrates. The audience is the jury. Previous Trials have included the Trial of P. H. Pearse (2016), the Trial of Sir James Craig and the Orange Order (2017) and the Trial of Thomas D'Arcy McGee (2018). All have toured Canada.

.....Final Programme details to be released soon."
